ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus for receiving persistent data into a running system. Metadata comprising a description of the known and/or unknown data model structure of the persistent data is used to establish a storage format and location for the persistent data, during runtime of the system. New transforms are created for data structures unknown to a running system.